Q: Creating a loop to create new keys based on a list of strings I'm trying to loop through a text file in a Python script and create new keys based on a list of strings. I'm assuming that my text file has two lines of text in the format of: KEY VALUE KEY.KEY.VALUE KEY4.KEY5.KEY6.KEY7.KEY8.KEY9.KEY10.KEY11 . . . I want to create a loop that loops through the lines until all the keys have been created, and then create a dictionary with the key as the first and value as the second. So that I would have: string_list = ["KEY.KEY.VALUE", "KEY4.KEY5.KEY6.KEY7.KEY8.KEY9.KEY10.KEY11"] results = {} for i in string_list:

basketball has long been known for basketball, but more recently -- with the emergence of freshman Deandre Ayton -- there's been some talk about the program becoming the best in college football. So, if that's the case, which school has the most football players in the NCAA FBS? It's no surprise that many believe it's the University of Arizona. Arizona has had a total of 2,053 football players -- both on scholarship and walk-ons -- since the bowl season of 2012 -- the earliest date of which they have numbers available. There's no hard-and-fast rule about how many players in a football program is too many, and the Wildcats have largely stayed around that 2,000-player total. In fact, the two schools with the most active football programs are UAB and Boise State. Arizona, for example, has had 2,000-plus players on its team roster in 12 of the last 13 seasons. The Huskies have had fewer football players -- 1,657 -- but they've still had plenty of attrition. Only seven seasons in school history have seen UF have less than 1,600 players on the football roster. The bottom line: Both schools are relatively stable, and both schools are great programs. UA: 8,225 FBS, 6,107 scholarship, 2,053 football players, .766 football wins UF: 1,657 FBS, 1,157 scholarship, 1,657 football players, .854 football wins

Determining the taste function of a test person can be done for various purposes. In particular a determination of the individual's taste can be carried out to determine whether a person is generally satisfied by a certain product and whether the person is sensitive to a certain component of the product. Known devices for determining the taste function of a test person are mostly based on electric measurement signals which reflect the taste or smell functions of the person. Based on the
